There will be a book launch on this afternoon, starting with a short talk by the author at 2 pm at the Old Low Light heritage centre, North Shields fish quay. Open to all visitors.

In this book the author / photographer recalls activity on the River Tyne, Northeast England. It mainly focuses on observations made during his 20s and 30s with a more recent section photographed during his 50s (from 2007). The river is still a hub and most important to our region, but things have changed over time. Ships continue to call with varied cargo, passenger ferries pass, fishing boats ply to and fro and other vessels sail by. There's life ashore too, on the river bank, and North Shields fish quay features highly – the author's most frequented location ... and his fascination here continues. His 'fish quay life' studies include some of its characters ... and their stories. The text has been augmented by research and recollections from some of the author's friends with river connections. A few gulls put in an appearance in Part Two; such species prompted his initial roaming around the river mouth from an early age.

This is Daniel's third published book, each of which features the Tyne and its fish quay in some way – capturing a changing way of life. He hopes to publish more in future years.

Six local businesses have sponsored the book. Sponsorship has assisted with production costs and included a donation to the North Shields Fishermen's Heritage Project.
